

Public Health

Public Health is designed to prepare students for entry and/or advancement in public health careers. The program provides students with an understanding of the public health sciences and with knowledge and skills that can be utilized in healthcare management, population based research and the community practice of public health.

- 43 Credits
- Two Concentrations
 - Health Behavior and Health Promotion
 - Global Environmental Health
- Completed applications reviewed on rolling basis. Late submitted applications may be considered on a space-available basis

Growth Opportunities

- 14% growth in public health careers (Health Educators, Community Health Workers, Patient Advocates etc.,)
 - By 2020, the United States will need more than 250,000 additional public health workers at the federal, state, and local levels
 - Will need to graduate three times the current number of graduates over the next 12 years to replenish the workforce
- health, health care organizations, health care organizations and health care organizations. The primary aim of providing health care services to people can lead

School of Community and Environmental Health

College of Health Sciences